

WorldKidLit

Here you'll find a suggested 120-word blurb for newsletters and social media, graphics, and suggested tweets

September is World Kid Lit Month

September is World Kid Lit Month: a month for young readers (and adult readers of children's and YA literature) to travel the world through books.

How to take part? Simply read a book for young people from another country, and share what you've read on social media with the hashtag #WorldKidLitMonth.

You'll find plenty of ideas of what to read at the World Kid Lit website: children's books from - or set in - other countries, and fiction, nonfiction, graphic novels and poetry translated into English from other languages.

Whether it's at school, in your local library or bookshop, or on social media, September is the perfect time to explore global reading for young people.

Happy travels wherever you fly by book!

Need graphics for social media posts?

You'll find free graphics in our public Google drive here.

Suggested tweets and text for social media graphics

#WorldKidLitMonth: explore children's and YA books from all over the world

Read the world through children's books in translation!

September is #WorldKidLitMonth

September is the month to explore children's and YA books from all over the world

Happy #WorldKidLitMonth!

Show us your shelves! Do you have any children's or YA books in translation? Where are they from? What language were they translated from? #WorldKidLitMonth

Read kid lit from beyond your borders

#WorldKidLitMonth

#WorldKidLitMonth

Travel the world with global children's books

September is #WorldKidLitMonth

Where will you fly by book?

September is #WorldKidLitMonth - the month to read children's literature from beyond your borders. What will you read this month?